— ALLIANCE —

What is Happening Now?

The Government is pushing for a new form of digital currency called CBDC. You would use it the same as you would now for cashless payments. At the moment you have full control and freedom over how, where, when, how much and what you spend your money on. This new digital money however, has strings attached. It can be programmable. This means you could be restricted from what you buy, how much you spend and how often. It means you will have no privacy at all in your transactions, forever. Every transaction, bill, or sale, will be monitored and stored, and potentially used against you or to control your behaviour in the future.

Why use Cash?

The cash system has been tried and tested for thousands of years.

It is simple to use and payment is instant. No need for internet, electricity, a bank or a mobile.

It is easy to understand. The elderly, disabled people and children find it easier. It can help with budgeting. It is convenient and universal.

Your transactions are safe from prying data gatherers and manipulators. No third party needed.

Your transactions are private, you don't need your identity and can't be used against you.

About CBDCs...

To access your CBDC you will need digital ID. It will be impossible to have money without a comprehensive national digital ID management system.

This money will not physically exist.

It is easier for the Central Banks to control you as you must verify your identity for every transaction forever. No benefits to the public have been given. Local banks will go.

It can be set by Government what you can buy/spend and where. Can be used for fraud and criminal activities - the same as cash can.
